Justification — Educational Expense

Physician employment contracts are technical legal documents that determine compensation, malpractice exposure, restrictive covenants, and long-term career mobility for the duration of practice. Most residency curricula do not include formal contract-negotiation training. ClauseLine's analysis qualifies as an educational tool supporting the resident's transition from training into independent practice — a documented professional development need. The expense aligns with the educational purpose of CME stipends, book/material allowances, and similar GME-administered funds.
